Once upon a time, there was a sparrow.

This sparrow had an aspiration to fly North.

It started flying. Suddenly, the weather became very cold. The sparrow’s wings were frozen with ice & it couldn’t fly anymore. The sparrow fell to the ground. The sparrow thought “Oh my God, I’m going to die!”

Along came a cow. The cow crapped on the sparrow. The sparrow was covered under a huge heap of cow dung. The sparrow thought “I’m going to die!”

However, the heat of the cow dung melted the ice on the sparrow’s wings & the sparrow was now able to flap it’s wings. As such, it became very happy & started to sing.

Along came a cat. Hearing the sparrow’s singing, it walked towards the sparrow & pulled the sparrow out of the cow dung. The sparrow thought “Oh my God, I’ve been saved!”

The cat ate the sparrow.

Now, the moral of the story.

1. If you have an aspiration to do something, go all out & do it... accomplish, do not begin. Do not turn back. Burn your bridges behind you. Go forward.

2. Anyone who craps on you is not necessarily your enemy & anyone who pulls you out of deep trouble is not necessarily your friend.

3. When you are in trouble(shh...), keep your mouth shut because like attracts like & trouble attracts more trouble.
